18th century craftsmanship in the 21st century

Our story starts around 300 years ago, when English furniture-making was at its height. It was the age of Adam, Chippendale, Sheraton, Gillows and many more; a time of elegance, innovation and ingenuity. They worked in new materials from the tropics: satinwood, mahogany, rosewood, tulipwood and decorated them with penwork and inlays of purpleheart, ebony, ivory and brass.

Not that we were around at the time. Schryvers was founded in 1970 but our craftsmen continue a tradition handed down through the generations.

In our restoration work, we use materials, traditional tools and finishes to preserve the integrity of the original. We have a store of rare imported and home-grown woods, some in the form of salvaged antique furniture. From our hoard of base metals, we restore locks, keys and other decorative items. We collect antique glass to give chandeliers, candelabra, antique latticed doors and mirrors a new lease of life.

We use our resources to copy classic furniture to complete a set of period chairs, for example. We also take commissions to create contemporary pieces that will endure by virtue of our 18th century craftsmanship.

We work with wood, metal, cane, glass, gesso and other materials to restore or rebuild furniture and fittings of financial, intrinsic or sentimental value.

We clean and repair chandeliers and other light fittings to bring back the shape and lustre of the original.

Our metalwork craftsmen can bring back functionality of old locks or convert a period piece to become an attractive lead-lined planter.

Our famous maroon van visits central London every week. We collect and deliver all over the home counties and make special arrangements further afield.
